1. Mission. The 690th Intelligence Support Squadron (690 ISS) provides communications, computers, information, and security services and support to the HQ Air Intelligence Agency's (AIA) daily, contingency, and wartime operations.

2. Command. The 690 ISS, located at Kelly Air Force Base, Texas, is a subordinate of the 690th Information Operations Group, HQ AIA/DO (Directorate of Operations). AIA is a field operating agency, subordinate to the Director of Intelligence, Surveillance and Reconnaissance, HQ United States Air Force.

3. Responsibilities. The various information operations capabilities of the 690 ISS are provided to a full range of Air Force, AIA, and air component activities as well as other service, joint, and national organizations. The squadron:

3.1. Provides infrastructure, resources, equipment maintenance, networking, and communications services for HQ AIA and the 67th Intelligence Wing, collocated at Kelly Air Force Base, Texas.

3.2. Provides sensitive compartmented information (SCI)-level systems certification and accreditation for the National Security Agency and Defense Intelligence Agency customers worldwide.

3.3. Provides printing, video, and graphics support for HQ AIA and other Department of Defense customers.

- 3.4. Provides 24-hour operations for communications systems and long-haul communications monitoring and maintenance services to ensure constant flow of critical secure and nonsecure information.
- 3.5. Provides security alarm installation and maintenance for HQ AIA and other collocated units.
- 3.6. Provides management of basic commercial communications services to HQ AIA.
